The Wedding Raam with Tomas De Bruyne

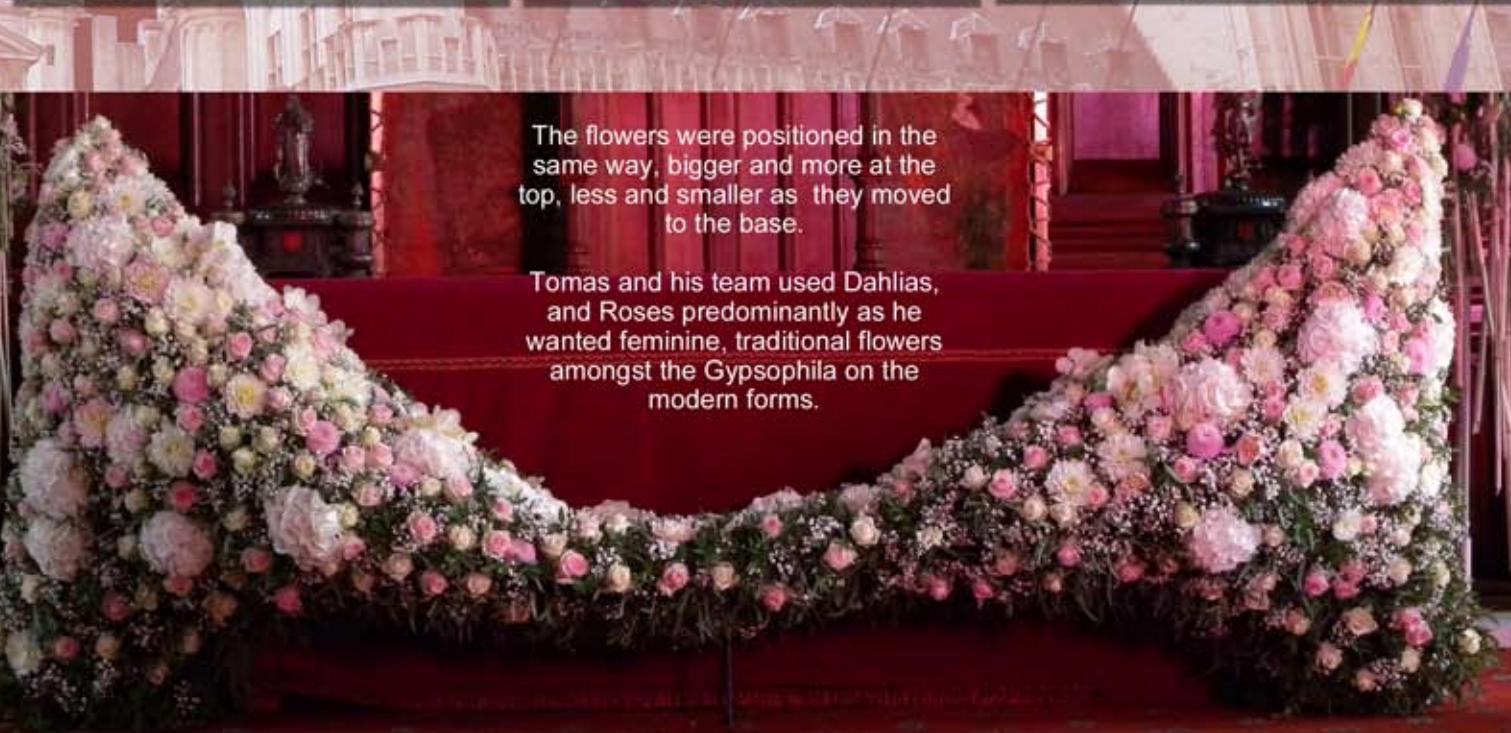

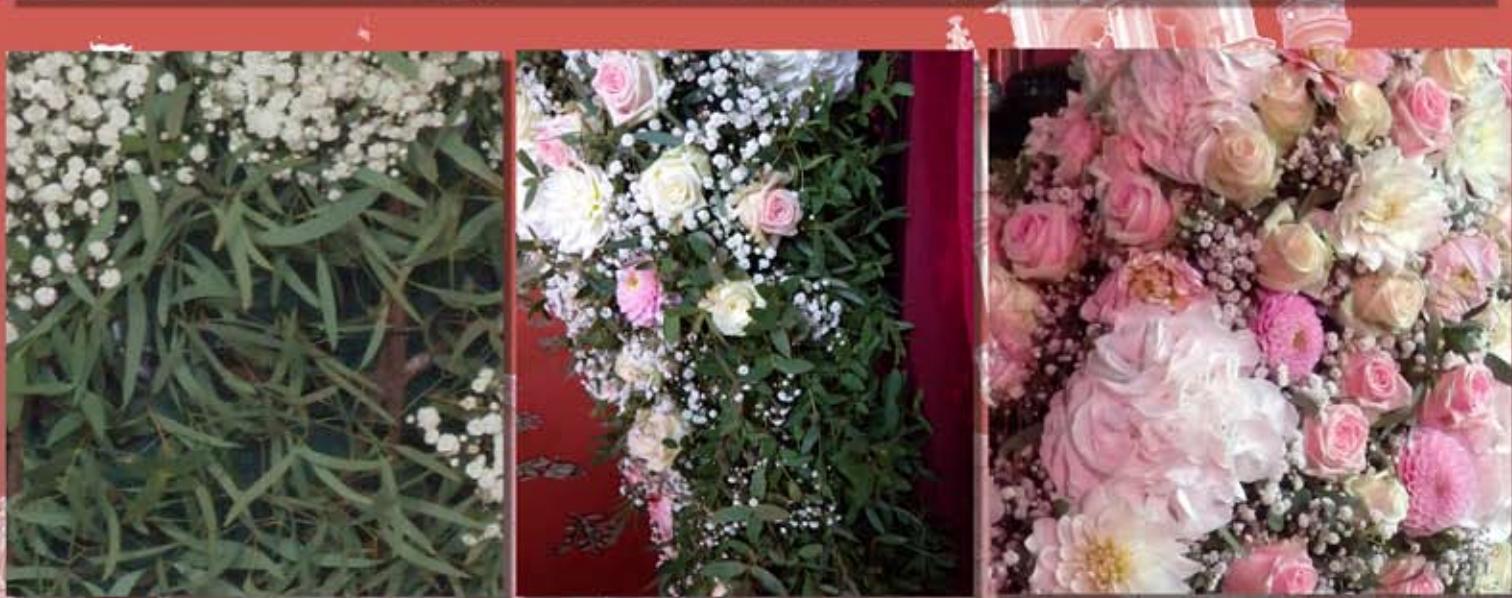

In an exclusive interview with leading Belgian florist Tomas De Bruyne, he revealed the design considerations behind this stunning wedding set. The complete interview and the behind the scenes activity as the designs were being made is all on this month's companion DVD, "Floraliëntime Brussels" available at www.floraldesign-dvds.com/Brussels.html or CLICK HERE

The floral foam was covered first in the foliage and then the Gypsophila was added, so it was denser at the top than the bottom.

The flowers were positioned in the same way, bigger and more at the top, less and smaller as they moved to the base.

Tomas and his team used Dahlias, and Roses predominantly as he wanted feminine, traditional flowers amongst the Gypsophila on the modern forms.

The horizontal designs would have been too tall to make with floral foam and so Tomas opted for the transparent approach with large glass flower phials and sticks coming off one central metal stand.

Light sticks were attached with very heavy
wire to the main metal
rod.

Large glass flower
tubes were attached
with cable ties.

The heavy
metal base
had a hollow
tube welded in place to take the metal rod.

The
construction's
base was placed inside
an urn and covered with Bun moss.

The flowers were placed so they were dotted around the design one colour, form or contrast at a time.

The Lilies were placed to be buds on the first day of the exhibition but by the third they would have been fully open and the arrangements would have taken on a whole different character. Tomas only used one or two Lilies per phial as at the fully open stage they drink a lot of water.

There was so much more to see from this fantastic exhibition
We will cover more in the November 2013 edition but if you can't wait, head over to www.floraldesign-dvds.com/Brussels.html and buy this month's brilliant DVD! It includes great interviews AND covers the work of all the designers.
